As youth with disabilities move through school, we need to think about what comes next.

Transition is the individualized action plan that addresses the skills, programs, and opportunities needed for the student to be successful after their school career ends.

This online workshop covers the requirements of IEP transition planning. Successful collaboration is key to supporting students with disabilities transition to adulthood.

- Find out the differences between a transition IEP and a pre-transition IEP
- Explore the student's important role in their transition IEP
- Learn how the IEP prepares the student for life after school
- How to craft an IEP that accurately reflects a student's transition strengths, preferences, interests, and needs

Who should attend? Families with middle and high school aged children, and members of the community who support these students.
